

Nea Palatia

38.3211868, 23.7960945

Oropos has a long coastline that starts from Kalamos and ends at Chalkoutsí.

The waters are clean and along the way bathers can enjoy sports or coffee and food in one of the many bars/restaurants with quality services.

Walking up to Nea Palatia in Oropos, Greece, is a tranquil experience filled with coastal charm and subtle historical echoes. As you approach from the surrounding roads, the town gradually reveals itself with a mix of modern homes, traditional Greek tavernas, and small local shops. The Aegean breeze carries the scent of salt and fresh seafood, reminding you that the shoreline is never far away.

If you’re coming from the inland side, the landscape gently slopes down toward the sea, with olive trees and patches of greenery scattered around. The streets are lined with a mix of white and pastel-colored houses, some adorned with flowering balconies and small gardens. As you walk closer to the waterfront, the atmosphere becomes livelier—locals chatting outside cafés, the occasional sound of a motorbike passing by, and seagulls circling above.

Once you reach the seafront, the calm waters of the South Euboean Gulf stretch before you, reflecting the changing colors of the sky. Small fishing boats bob near the shore, while tavernas and ouzeries with outdoor seating invite you to sit and enjoy the view. The gentle lapping of the waves and the distant silhouette of Evia Island across the water create a peaceful, picturesque scene that embodies the laid-back charm of this coastal town.
